'Mankind owes the child the best it has to give . . . All children without any exception whatsoever, shall be entitled to these rights, without distinction or discrimination.'

—Declaration of the Rights of the Child (adopted unanimously by the U.N. General Assembly, 1959)

'About those 17 million children who died during the year (1981), there is little more to be said. Whoever they once were, whatever religion they were growing up in, whatever language they were beginning to speak, and whatever potential their lives held, they were simply failed by the world into which they were born . . . For the children of 1982, the facts of life on earth will not be significantly different. Of the 125 million who will be born, 17 million will again be dead before their fifth birthday. And between 1981 and 1982, although there is no trend so pronounced as to break through the inevitable imprecision of available figures, there is every reason to suggest that times are getting darker for the world's poorest children.'

—James P. Grant, UNICEF's Executive Director in The State of the World's Children 1981-1982

'If the tears of this little child move you, they are a window open onto the sea, for what you feel are not merely the tears of this one child but of all children. The child is merely the one who takes you by the hand to teach you.'

—Antoine de St. Exupéry

Featured among the demographic data drawn from publications of the United Nations Population Division is a new series of infant mortality estimates for less developed countries. These estimates are the result of a recently completed study of infant mortality by the Population Division, undertaken with financial assistance from UNICEF. The estimates take into account all available data from registration systems, censuses, and surveys.

General Notes

The Data Sheet's Children Data Sheet, issued by the Population Reference Bureau, Inc., intends to draw attention to the needs, priority rights, and well-being of children throughout the world, particularly those in less developed countries. The annual data presentation dates from 1962. The data sheet is compiled with information from UNICEF, international agencies in the field, and governments of countries for all mentioned by the United Nations, and selected geographical entities with a population of 200,000 or more in mid-1982. Thanks are expressed to those persons and agencies for the assistance in the preparation of the Data Sheet.

Sources of data: Data come primarily from United Nations (UN) Population Division, World Population Prospects as Assessed in 1980, and the previous issues of this Assessment that of 1978.
